

The Search

Static crackled from the speaker as the nurse
piloted the ultrasound like a plane in search of survivors, on your wet skin.

You were ten weeks pregnant.
You'd bled a few drops that weekend, knowing, inside, a storm had hit.

The plane crisscrossed over you, signaling against gray fog. No answer. No answer. No answer.